Friday, January 23, 2004 - 10:00 AM

The mysteries of divine love are infinite; the most refined soul can only enjoy them, without ever understanding its secret. It is about the rarest energy; it is indefinable and manifests itself in all possible ways, and is not necessarily to the liking of every creature.

"How can one make man understand that ordeals are part and parcel of life? This principle is not easy to accept and yet, it is fundamental. When the moment has come for him to take stock of his incarnation, he will understand and grow stronger in wisdom. It takes a lot to accept with gratitude all that can occur during one's life. Rebellion can prevail temporarily, and lead afterwards to a constructive realization. Faith is the torch lighting the way of one who has it, and whose fervent heart is ready for all fights. He can fall and he picks himself up, trying to analyze the major cause of the event.

"The great divine principles are beyond human comprehension. How could it be otherwise? Men suffer and bend under the load, which sometimes overpowers them. Moments of peace and joy are rapture for a grateful heart. Our brothers are advancing slowly. They try to benefit from a teaching which they assimilate in their own way, many of them superficially, hence the ceaseless repetitions in our remarks meant to hit their target.

"One day, all the light will appear in them. May that happen in this life! That is our objective, although we are targeting a higher achievement. May they all be blessed and grow stronger at this prospect."

Babuji