

Thursday, May 29, 2003 - 10:00 AM

Is life worth living? That's man reasoning when he wonders about the interest of life to him. Each one answers this question in his own way, according to his conception of his own life, his success, his convictions and the state of mind prevailing when he articulates the question.

"What meaning does he give to life, what are his motivations and especially, is he aware of God, and eventually how important does he think God is? So many questions, which may remain unanswered. Can one live without this aspect, without faith and the resulting love? Is man happier with this prospect? Does he understand the reason for his incarnation? It is not easy for him to find appropriate answers to all his questionings. Can the fact of having answers to all his questions make him happy? That is not so sure!

"The human being is of a complex nature. Reasoning is not enough to appease him. Happy the heart surrendered to the laws of a right and good God, whichever way he appears to them. That is wise and thus it should be, so that surrender would result in man's being grateful beyond the ordeals of this life. Life is not easy, even with the greatest faith. It does not spare anyone from moments of discouragement, which also affect the strongest."

Babuji